PROGRAMME AIMS

The degree programme aims to produce high-calibre Master's graduates with language/cultural and language/theoretical skills in a European or extra-European foreign language, as well as specific training in teaching foreigners Italian language and culture.

Along with a broad background in literature, political and cultural history, and Italian art and music, graduates will also have a range of skills which will allow them to act as mediators in intercultural situations as well as to manage competently the challenges of the contemporary multicultural societies.

Their teacher training entails internships, placements, laboratories and tailor-made training activities, answering to the new job description of teacher of Italian language and culture which our now multi-ethnic middle and high schools require (a framework qualifying exam is currently up for institutional approval).

OUTLOOK

The programme thus allows for gradual acquisition of skills suited to the two profiles (teacher of Italian languages and culture and expert on intercultural mediation). The first year is more specialist-weighted (teaching of Italian as L2): a series of complementary course units connected with languages, and others designed as an introduction to multiculturalism (pedagogy of inter-culturalism, anthropology of migratory processes). The second year hinges around the compulsory internship, which may also be conducted abroad. Over the two years students gain a thorough knowledge of two foreign languages.
